Raised in a climate and a culture where women and girls are not encouraged or permitted to pursue sports activities, Raha strove to be different and her fearless approach challenges the perception of Saudi women.

With no infrastructure, training or equipment in place for Saudi women, Raha tackled one of nature's most difficult and dangerous challenges to prove that anyone is capable of achieving greatness- all with a smile on her face.

Since climbing Everest, Raha's gone from strength to strength developing her speaking skills and talking on both a corporate and international stage with remarkable articulateness and charisma.

Through her efforts and those of others, the Saudi government is acknowledging the link between sport and health, and the necessity to provide it equally for future generations.
